

Tapping Into the Emotions that Best Serve the Realistic Goals of Divorcing Parties and their Children

Robin Graine
March 17, 2012

Training Faculty Member at Mediation Conference on Emotions in Divorce Settlements

ROBIN GRAINE | MARCH 17, 2012

To be successful, you will need to help your clients transform their negative emotions into energy for positive change. Your clients are probably not looking for a way to turn the bad into the good. Instead, they are struggling for relief. They are seeking relief from the overwhelming emotions that are suffocating them, clouding their thinking and turning their everyday activities into impossible chores. Your job is to help them feel some relief. To get clarity and to assist them in turning their emotions into a comprehensive list of needs and goals while turning their trauma into fuel for positive change.